This is a review of the moon over Buffalo, which is a farce set in Buffalo, New York in 1953. It has a repertoire of Cyrano de Bergerac and private lives that the couple, George and Charlotte struggle to accomplish as they face complex family affairs in the hope of visiting a Hollywood director. The plot description of Moon over Buffalo shows George Hay, who is an actor and tours small theaters with his plays like Cyrano de Bergerac and Private Lives. George performs with his wife Charlotte Hay, who wants to make a career in film. Rosalind (Rose), the daughter of George and Charlotte, also performed with her parents and met with manager Paul. However, Roz goes on a normal life where she meets the weatherman presenter on television, Howard. Eileen replaced Roz as an actor, but staged the drama through her illicit romance with George. The other characters that influence the game are Ethel, George's almost deaf mother-in-law, and Richard, a family lawyer who has admired Charlotte for a long time. Moon Over Buffalo uses a situation comedy approach accompanied by humor, slapping elements, and sexual allusions. George has to achieve some physical strength in the game as he takes on the mock fencing match along with Charlotte. High levels of exercise are also in the fight match between George and Howard. George attracts the attention of the audience with his physical and emotional aspects in the drama. Actors use fast-paced conversation and action due to endless backbiting and hysterical efforts to end confusion among themselves. The news of the arrival of Hollywood director Frank Capra to watch the play by George and Charlotte amplifies the comic moments in the drama. These actors can't believe their luck because that's what they crave and deserve. However, these actors do not agree with their difficult financial conditions. This element contributes to constant bickering in the play. Two plays in the play (Cyrano de Bergerac and Private Lives) show Charlotte and George discussing film and theater. Tensions and debates about illegal deed, alcohol use, and mistaken identity, wearing the wrong dresses, and falling into the pit all caught the attention of the audience. Finally, in this chaotic play, actors have to solve their problems after the show. Discussion of the main characters and actors and their performances robie Schafer captures the attention of the audience, portraying Charlotte Hay as a jealous wife who wants to run away with Richard over her husband's affair with Eileen. Schafer perfectly portrays Charlotte in the way she engages George about their family problems and fighting swords. Shafer and Miller portray the characters at their best as they keep the audience laughing all the time. John Miller has done an incredible job as George Hay. Miller captures the attention of the audience in his drunken stupor and acts, the wrong suit, the wrong drama, the later arrival and pit crash. Miller plays George perfectly well, comparing the bodily and expressive aspects of the character because of comic acts with his wife throughout the drama. Phil Parker plays the role of Howard, the boring fiance of Roses. Parker's best moment is a portrayal of Howard when he sets up a major confusion in the drama as Ethel, Charlotte's hard-to-hear mother, presents him as the acclaimed director, Frank Capra. Kim Parker portrays Rosalind (Rose) at her best when she grabs the attention of audiences through her decision to theater for a normal life, away from her family problems. However, Kim's role becomes significant at the end of the play when she agrees to bring Paul on the spot. Laura Price acts as Eileen. Eileen changes George's life after an illegal romance in which she conceives. However, Laura's portrayal of Eileen becomes important at the end of the play when Howard says he met a former love, which is actually Eileen. Philip Parker acts as Paul, stage manager of actors. Philip attracts the attention of the viewer when he turns out to be the true love of Rose. Ann Sobie plays the role of Ethel, Charlotte's hard-hearing mother, which amplifies confusion in the game by using the malapropism of every word said. In fact, this role suits Anne as Ethel because of the confusion she brings to the drama. Ron Roberts acts as the love of Richard, who wants to save Charlotte from her unfaithful husband. Ron as Richard becomes relevant only in the play, when Charlotte leaves George. Discussion of the lock director manages to develop the lock with the help of certain actions that depict the normal behavior of the performers. The director reaches the lock, making the actors available at certain moments at the appropriate moments. For example, we have George who falls into a pit and ends up in the hospital. Howard's visit adds to the confusion in the play. Meanwhile, George reacts in self-defense, tying Howard. The director has managed to be active and inventive in order to amplify the blocking as he encourages performers to increase the blocking of their creativity. As a result, the actors manipulated physical movements to amplify the blocking. Finally, the use of erroneous identities of different characters and malapropism also contribute to blocking the game. Blocking helps performers act within their roles because they don't create their characters from scratch. As a result, they are able to produce a cohesive and successful game. Discussion of the pictorial elements of the play has all the right scenic elements to make it a farce. There are many doors in the play as part of the settings that control the movement of the characters and allow the actors to skip each other. Performers use these doors to perfection. There are also sections that include the use of doors that lead to different areas of the house. The living room provides the scene of the family home with many sections to accommodate the exact movements that match Game. Discussion of Lighting Lighting Design Moon Over Buffalo Aimed at two goals. These include lighting scenes and actors and creating a favorable mood and controlling the audience's attention. Moon Over Buffalo uses indirect light sources with general lighting to create a picturesque living room element. Lighting design represents the direction on stage, visibility, color and strength of the composition, dark shadow, mood and movement of performers. The first three elements are transformed to reflect the external environment on the balcony during the night, in which the lighting focuses on the actors. The moon above Buffalo lighting design allows viewers to see the actors at all times as three-dimensional. The technical aspects of lighting take into account the correct visibility, movement, direction and mood, as they correspond to other elements of design. The main type of lighting in this performance creates a home lighting system for performers. These light sources are up, on the sides, and above the stage. Discussion Costumes All actors have different costumes in the play. However, in a farce like this, the costume creates confusion. We look at what all the actors wear during the performances. We also look at clothes and accessories along with the wigs and makeup of these actors. George dresses appropriately for Cyrano de Bergerac, not private lives. Costumes used in the play are aimed at depicting real-time in history. We also focus on various costume elements such as color, cutout, fabric and the weight of George and Charlotte costumes. They aim to mimic the physical nature of the play and reflect the professional life of struggling actors, especially George in his drunken stupor. These costumes are formalized by performers to reflect their daily lives. That's why the choices of cut, color, fabric, and design all reflect the nature of this drama, as they should fit the fashion of the 1950s. The talk of sound sound production of Moon Over Buffalo was wonderful and successful because it met the quality of physical drama. A notable element of sound in Moon Over Buffalo is the ringing of the phone, which is a one call from Frank Capra. There are also the sounds of crushing glasses. The crew perfectly withered these elements of sounds to match other elements of production, such as movements. The constant shouting and bickering of the actors forced the sound engineer to keep the microphone at a good level to minimize the consequences of the screams. This created a seamless sound effect and musical segways that enhanced the atmosphere of the game. As a result, the sound did not distract the audience. All the design elements in the game work together to develop a production that is cohesive, reliable and perfect because they all fit the general vision of farce. Discussion about the preferences of the performance Actors have a great experience for physical drama. The director corresponds to the physical speed through a quick time, especially in a show with multiple doors where actors have to work in and out with energy and engage in constant negotiations. However, leaves viewers to wonder if George and Charlotte have any true feelings of love between them. George only reveals that Charlotte washes it while Charlotte puts artificial feelings towards George. It makes the audience not feel any emotions to the actors. Aside from the play's hilarious moments, the play makes theatrical life almost obsolete, because George and Charlotte portray that theatrical life is a dying art form. As a result, actors only dream of life and success in cinema. In general, the comedy achieves its goal, making the audience laugh as it progresses. However, it seems most elements of Act I are just for rehearsal, because it is in Act II, where the action begins to evolve as the actors take the physical elements of the play. It is in Act II where we see confusion in a play that depicts the wrong lines and costumes for another. The play also achieves its comic effect through action, blocking and an element of design. The moon over Buffalo, like farce, offers us comic moments with outstanding performers who use hilarious misunderstandings, mass confusion, and comic characteristics at their best. It has a great script with well-coordinated design elements that lead to cohesive production for slap lovers. Lovers.
